Read the dialogue below and find out about the types of schools in the UK and Japan. Do we have the same school system in Ukraine?

HERESA: Hi! My name is Theresa, and I'm from the United Kingdom.

TAKESI: Hello! I'm Takeshi, and I'm a senior high school student from Japan.

HERESA: What's senior high school?

TAKESI: In Japan, we have elementary, junior, and senior high school. We study in elementary school for six years, three years in junior high school, and three years in senior high school. Japan

HERESA: Oh, I see! We call them primary and secondary school in the UK. Primary school usually takes six years, and in secondary school, we have to study until we are 16. The UK

TAKESI: Elementary and high schools are also compulsory in Japan. So you are going to finish secondary school at the age of 16?

HERESA: Right.

TAKESI: Lucky you! I have to stay in school until I am 18...

How European Education systems work

School education

Most European students spend at least 9 or 10 years in school. As the length of compulsory education differs from country to country, so does the age when children begin school – though it's usually between 5 and 6 years old. European systems aim to be broad-based and general, giving pupils the basic knowledge and skills they'll need for the future. Though each EU country is responsible for its own system, and what is taught, national efforts to improve quality are supported by the European Commission.

Higher education

Europe has some 4,000 higher education institutions, with over 19 million students and 1.5 million staff. Year after year, European universities rank prominently among the top 100 in the world. Yet tuition fees are generally very reasonable. Thanks to the smooth transferability of coursework, qualifications and research opportunities between European universities, it is now easier than ever to spend time studying abroad, or to go and use your degree to work in another country.

Vocational education & training

This gives you the skills you need to compete in today's global jobs market. Apprenticeship-style education like this is usually related to a specific trade or career path, and combines practical work experience with theoretical study. It can take place at the secondary, post-secondary or further education level, but it is not equivalent to higher education.
