Reading: Culture and gifts

Read this information about giving gifts in various countries

Business acquaintances do not exchange gifts at Christmas, but usually send each other Christmas cards. People usually give a small gift such as a bottle of wine, flowers, or chocolates if they are invited to someone's home.

An employee who is retiring, getting married or having a child will usually receive gifts from their colleagues. In some multinational companies, there are strict policies in place about giving or receiving gifts at work.

Gifts are not given unless a relationship with the person has been established. Gifts that may be misinterpreted as a bribe are unwelcome

Giving gifts is an important social act. An employee usually brings back inexpensive gifts for colleagues after a vacation. In business and daily life, gifts are not opened in the presence of the giver. If you receive a wrapped gift, set it aside until the giver leaves.

1. Which country above has a similar custom of giving gifts as in Viet Nam
2. Do you ever give gifts to clients/customers/ your boss? If yes, on what occasion do you do so?
3. Is gift-giving an important part of doing business? Why or Why not?
4. Is it OK for clients to receive expensive gifts from a company?
4. What kind of gifts would you take and accept if you were a foreigner to Vietnam on a business trip?
