	Universities are often divided into schools by subject, schools do not typically have a lot of autonomy from the university. A university = a college = a school	The colleges are governed by the university but each college has quite a lot of autonomy from each other as well as from the university itself.
	Based on overall performance on all assignments. The GPA system: constant assessment such as quizzes, daily homework, presentations, classroom participation etc.	Based mostly on the final exam
	An academic year is usually divided into two periods called semesters (First semester, Second semester)	An academic year is usually divided into three periods called terms (Autumn term, Spring term, Summer term)
	A freshman A sophomore A junior A senior	A first year student A second year student A third year student A fourth year student
	The US differentiates between in-state tuition fees and out-of-state tuition fees, as well as between private and public universities. The average tuition fee for public two-year institutions - $3000 per year, for private four-year institutions - $29,000 per year. Some private four-year institutions can cost up to $50,000 per year. The government has very little control.	According to a law passed in 2012, universities in England may charge up to £9000 (approximately $14,300) per year (UK or EU citizens, i fees for international students are significantly higher). The government sets the limits for tuition fees, and each individual school sets its own fee up to that limit.
